

BUBBLE BOOH and the land of VIRTUES

Sheri Lee Page

Young Bubble Booh had never known the importance of virtues and was definitely not acting them out. Because of his bad behavior, he had been banished to the land of black and white. This meant that he would not be allowed to join in the fun, laughter and games until he learned the most important lessons of all Kindness, Manners, Sharing, Love and Listening!

One day a very sad and lonely Bubble Booh was sitting under his black and white tree, longing to go back to the magical land and gain back his color. He thought and he thought about what he could do.

Bubble Booh sat up straight, and said

“I am ready to accept and learn the importance of

Kindness,
Manners,
Sharing,
Love
& Listening.”

“If you want to find the color in your life you need to visit the five villages of VIRTUES. The village of Kindness, Manners, Sharing, Love and last but not least the village of Listening. You must meet the five kings and if you learn and earn all that’s important you will get your color back.”
The little girl with golden hair gave Bubble Booh her hand and helped him cross the river.

First, he came to the village of Kindness. There he met all the kings men and asked them to take him to King Kindo.

“I am here with no fear, it’s my turn, I want to learn how can I find the color BLUE” asked Bubble Booh.

The King Kindo replied “Laugh and smile, for more than a while. Take time to be kind and be happy too, prepare to go the extra mile and you will find the color BLUE.”
